Synopsis of the Activity (Description)

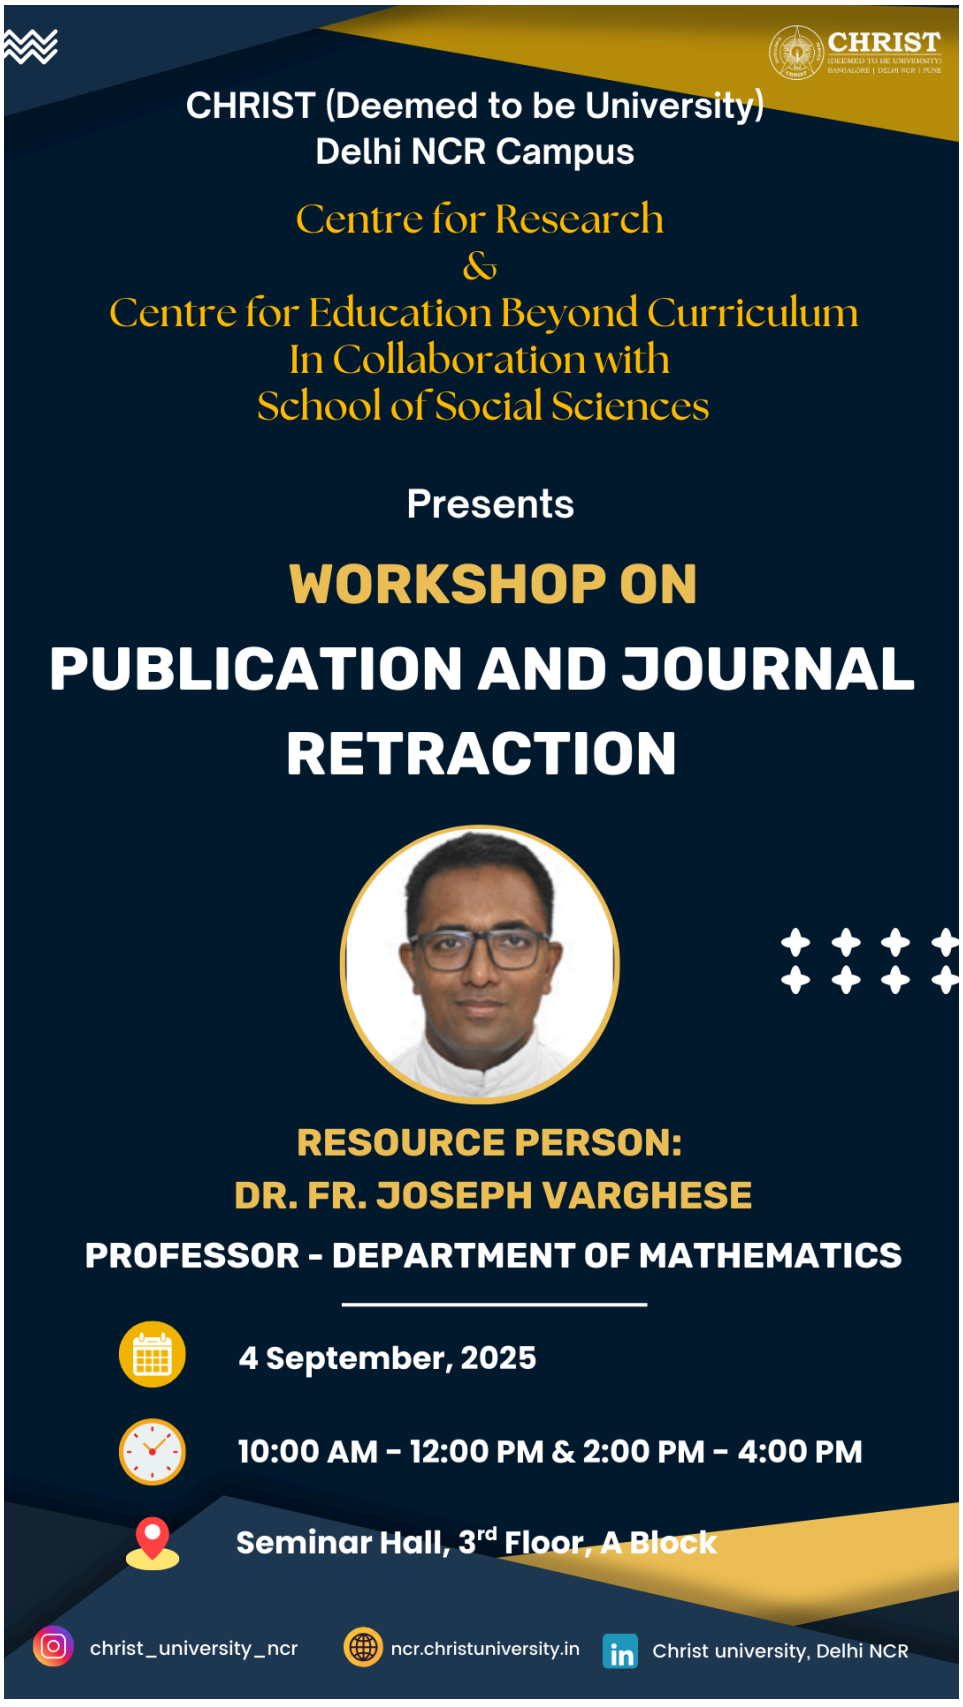

Highlights of the Activity	Explained key research metrics: Impact Factor, Cite Score, and h-index. Stressed the importance of setting clear research goals and striving to own the field globally. Emphasized the question of what gets cited and who cites what, to help faculties understand citation patterns. Emphasized the need for a consistent watch of databases such as Scopus and Web of Science. Warned against publishing in an unethical manner and discussed the implications of journal retractions. Highlighted the role of institutions in guiding faculty and ensuring ethical research practices.

	Provided strategies on how to avoid journal retractions and discussed the penalties of unethical practices. Concluded with a call to action for faculty and institutions to strengthen research credibility and visibility.
Summary of the Activity	The activity centered on creating awareness about responsible research and publication practices. It began with an explanation of bibliometric indicators such as the impact factor, cite score, and h-index, enabling scholars to better understand how their research contributions are measured. The session also emphasized the importance of aligning research with global standards, setting long-term goals, and producing work that gains international recognition. Faculty were encouraged to pay close attention to citation trends—both in terms of what gets cited and who is citing their work—while maintaining a consistent watch on indexing databases to monitor visibility and credibility. A strong warning was issued about journal retraction and the consequences of journal retractions, which can harm not only individual researchers but also institutional reputation. The discussion highlighted the responsibility of institutions in promoting ethical publishing and providing continuous support to scholars. The session concluded with practical advice on how to avoid unethical publishing traps and outlined the penalties associated with such practices. A strong call to action was made for researchers and institutions to uphold academic integrity, contribute quality research, and collectively enhance global academic visibility.
Key Feedback	• Requirements for more such sessions • Sessions tailored to the discipline • More time for activity and Q and A
Action Taken, if any	More workshops and sessions on research, publication practices, and academic ethics will be planned at regular intervals. Future sessions will be scheduled in collaboration with experts from diverse fields to cater to discipline-specific aspects. Future sessions will allocate dedicated time for interactive activities and extended Q&A rounds to encourage deeper engagement.
