Synopsis of the Activity (Description)

Highlights of the Activity	Introduced key research performance metrics: Impact Factor, Cite Score, and h-index. Emphasized the importance of defining clear research goals and striving to establish a global presence in one's field. Discussed the significance of understanding what gets cited and who cites what, to analyze citation patterns and trends. Highlighted the need for a regular review of indexing databases (e.g., Scopus, Web of Science) for tracking visibility and research impact. Alerted scholars to the risks of publishing through unethical practice and the serious implications of journal retractions. Underlined the institutional role in guiding scholars towards ethical research and publication practices.

	Provided insights on avoiding predatory publishing and explained the penalties associated with unethical practices. Concluded with a call to action for both researchers and institutions to safeguard academic integrity and enhance global research visibility.
Summary of the Activity	The activity focused on strengthening awareness of ethical publishing practices and the responsible use of research metrics. It began with an overview of bibliometric indicators, including the impact factor, cite score, and h-index, which are essential in evaluating the quality and reach of academic work. Scholars were encouraged to set purposeful research goals and aim for global recognition by producing impactful, citable work. The discussion emphasized the importance of monitoring citation trends and maintaining a consistent watch on academic databases to ensure that research remains visible and relevant. Considerable attention was given to the dangers of predatory journals and the damaging effects of journal retractions, not only for individual researchers but also for their affiliated institutions. The session highlighted how universities and research centers play a pivotal role in fostering ethical scholarship by guiding their members towards credible publishing avenues. Practical strategies for avoiding unethical publishing were shared, alongside a reminder of the penalties that could arise from engaging with questionable journals. The activity concluded with a strong call to action for researchers and institutions to uphold ethical standards, contribute high-quality work, and collectively strengthen the credibility and global presence of academic research.
Key Feedback	• More time for activities and Q&A
Action Taken, if any	Future sessions will allocate dedicated time for interactive activities and extended Q&A rounds to encourage deeper engagement.

Impact Analyses and Action Taken

The feedback indicates that the session was well-received and impactful, with the majority of participants expressing satisfaction and providing no major criticisms. Overall, the session was rated highly successful, with participants appreciating the informative and motivating delivery, while also requesting small enhancements to maximize interaction.

For workshops to be planned in the future, the few constructive suggestions point towards extending the duration slightly will be considered to allow for greater interaction and engagement.
