Event Description

Held over three weeks in the heart of the academic year at the Kengeri Campus, Darpan is a sprawling cultural festival that exists for one purpose: to give every hidden talent on campus the stage it deserves. True to its name, which means mirror, the festival exists to reflect back every ounce of creative energy this community holds, whether that energy lives in a voice, a paintbrush, a script, or a pair of dancing feet. It brings together students from every background and every discipline, united only by the fact that they have something to show the world and, for these three weeks, a platform to show it on.

For the university, Darpan is also a statement about the kind of education it believes in, one that values creativity and cultural appreciation as much as academic achievement. It underscores a genuine commitment to holistic development, treating the arts not as an extracurricular afterthought but as a core part of campus life. Darpan offers the clearest possible picture of just how deep and how wide the creative talent on this campus runs. It is not just a festival, it is proof that talent is everywhere here, you simply have to give it a mirror to see itself in.
